Google Introduces Lumiere Artificial Intelligence

Google has introduced its latest artificial intelligence (AI) model, Lumiere, a multimodal video generation tool capable of producing realistic 5-second-long videos.

Lumiere is a text-to-video diffusion model designed for synthesising videos that portray realistic, diverse and coherent motion.

The model facilitates content creation tasks and video editing applications such as image-to-video, video in painting, and stylized video generation.

Lumiere model uses a Space-Time u-Net (STUNet) architecture to generate videos.

Using this architectural design, the model processes all frames in a video at once instead of generating keyframes and then filling the missing frames using temporal super-resolution (TSR) models, which is a common approach for existing video generators.

Lumiere generates the entire temporal duration of the video at once by deploying both spatial and temporal down- and up-sampling.
