North Korea Conducts 'Underwater Nuclear Weapons System' Test

North Korea informed it has carried out a test of its "underwater nuclear weapons system" in response to drills by the US, South Korea and Japan this week.

The underwater drone, which supposedly can carry a nuclear weapon, was tested off the east coast, state media stated.

South Korea called the reported tests a "provocation".

The North has claimed tests of its "Haeil-5-23" system before, but the latest incident comes as the North has ramped up military action in recent weeks.

It claimed to have deployed a new solid-fuelled intermediate-range ballistic missile.

That followed live-fire drills at the maritime border with South Korea in the first week of January.

SCIENCE & TECHNOLOGY

Japan Becomes 5th Country to Land Spacecraft on The Moon

Japan became the 5th country in history to reach the moon when one of its spacecraft successfully made a soft landing on the lunar surface.

Japan follows the United States, the Soviet Union, China and India in reaching the moon.

SLIM, which was aiming to hit a very small target, is a lightweight spacecraft about the size of a passenger vehicle.

It was using "pinpoint landing" technology that promises far greater control than any previous moon landing.

While most previous probes have used landing zones about 10 kilometers (six miles) wide, SLIM was aiming at a target of just 100 meters (330 feet).

A landing of such precision would be a world's first, and would be crucial technology for a sustainable, long-term and accurate space probe system, stated Hiroshi Yamakawa, president of Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency, or JAXA.
